Campaigning in North Luzon. From the New York Sun.

All our military operations in Luzon, unth the past few days, have been confined to the low-lying plains that converge upon Manila from north and south where the irrigated rice fields spread away between areas of high and dense jungle. These plains have been almost impassable in the rainy season now ending and the campaign against Aguinaldo was therefore practically suspended for six months. Under the best conditions the march and camp in cless steaming lowlands are trying to men onaccustomed to a tropical climate.

Last month the monsoon changed. The southern winds that for six months had brought a continuous downpour veered to the north and the season of the polar monthe north and the season of the polar mon-seen set in. This period of change is the dreaded time of typhoon and some weecks elapse before the season of cooler and comparatively clear weather begins. In these last days of the rainy season our troops, under Generals Lawton, MacArthur, Young and Wheaton, have been pushing on over the plains of Luzon, making steady progress in spite of mud and rain, begin-ning the campaign thus early in order to catch Aguinaldo if possible in his northern haunts or at least to prevent him from rehaunts or at least to prevent him from re-turning south.

This northern movement has brought our This northern movement has brought our ferces to the north edge of the rice plains bounded by high hills and a part of the cavalry has already crossed the hill ranges and descended into the valley of the Cagayyan, the largest river of Luzon. Thus our advance guard has left the region of rice and entered the best tobacco-growing area of the Philippines. They have fought, hitherto, in one of the most populous parts of the archipelago, where the density of population is as high as 200 to the square mile. They have now entered a valley which, for They have now entered a valley which, for a hundred miles north of their present position, has not more than fifty inhabi-tants to the square mile. They have reached a river that is navigated in light-draught boats for 200 miles to its mouth at the north end of the island. In other words, they have attained a part of the island, extending about 200 miles north and south, where an all-water route is the means of communication with Manila. All the settlements along the Cagayan are shipping points for the tobacco that is collected at the port of Aparri and transferred to coastwise vessels that take it to Manila. If we were entering upon a long campaign in north Luzon, which seems improbable, the Cagayan would be of great importance for the transportation of mili-tary supplies, a difficult matter thus far at Il points away from the railroad. It remains to be seen whether Aguinaldo can clude our troops by skulking in the mountains that border the Cagayan valley on the east and west. It does not seem erable force among these mountains, for they are almost destitute of population and food resources. Very few of the valley people have taken any part in his war, and coming among them as a fugitive he can scarcely expect to raily them to his sup-port. Entering this valley, he has left beport. Entering this valley, he has left be-bind the region and people that have sup-plied him with fighters and food. No other proof is needed to show that his "republic" s today a myth,
